By William Loughton, Schoolmaster at Kensington. Price 1 s. 6 d. or 15 s. a Dozen, for the Use of Schools.

The ingenious Author of the Republick of Letters, for September 1734, gives this Character of Mr Loughton's Grammar. "The Author, says he, in his Preface gives his Reasons for compiling A Practical English Grammar, which it must be owned, he has done in such a Manner, as to render it the best of the Kind: His Rules are plain and easy, concise and clear; he has laid aside the old Terms, and made use of such as are more expressive of the several Parts of Speech; his Way of Question and Answer renders it intelligible to young Capacities. ----- I heartily wish it more generally introduced into our English Schools, since it would give all those whose Education is confin'd to their Mother Tongue an adequate Notion of it; teach the Fair Sex to write more correctly; and expedite the Studies of such who are designed for the Learned Languages, by furnishing them with a proper Idea of the several Parts of Grammar before their Entrance upon the Latin Rudiments."
